reflections on books and art. A Diversity of Creatures by Rudyard Kipling (1917). Introduction. In his excellent biography of Kipling, Charles Carrington devotes much of chapter 16 to a fascinating picture of the political scene in Britain from 1909 to 1914. He reminds us that the pre-Great War years weren't the summery idyll they're often painted as, but a time of intense social and political strife. In 1909 the all-powerful Liberal government launched David Lloyd-George's "People's Budget" to raise taxes on the wealthy and create a welfare state "like other well-off people the Kiplings were".
