E-commerce is associated with the buying and selling of information, products and services via computer networks. Key element of e-commerce is information processing. The effects of e-commerce are already appearing in all areas of business, from customer service to new product design. E-commerce requires robust servers to store and distribute large amounts of digital content to consumers. These multimedia storage servers are large information warehouses capable of handling various content. Implementation: The system becomes real. New technology comes in the door. Training is conducted. The successful implementation of an e-commerce strategy helps in gaining a competitive edge over the existing competitors, no matter whether they are online or offline. It's evident: a clear winner in the game of e-commerce power play will be one who understands the role of deep integration of these 4 core pillars along with the importance of executing a 7 step approach around these pillars. This blog is work of Anuj Ramachandra, Business Consultant, Ecommerce at Embitel Technologies. For more information and to know how Embitel Technologies can help you drive your business objectives using e-commerce technologies, contact us at sales@embitel.com or visit our website at www.embitel.com. The successful strategies in the e-commerce industry are developed primarily based on how customers shop, what they buy and how they respond to technologies employed by businesses. According to a report by Statista, global retail e-commerce sales are expected to reach $4.8 trillion by 2021. Download our Premium Resource "Practical e-commerce merchandising advice." As a growing e-commerce business owner, you need to keep a track of these technologies and find ways to use the ones that best suit your needs. The above strategies will provide a better value to your users and make your business more successful in 2019 and beyond. Smith Willas is a freelance writer, blogger, and digital media journalist. E-commerce giants like Amazon continue to draw in smaller companies that partner with them to tackle difficult challenges like distribution and take advantage of the enormous audience that the company offers. After all, 44% of all product searches begin on Amazon, and the mega-company owns nearly half of all online retail sales. The new American Dream is made possible by e-commerce, advanced technologies, and social platforms that connect consumers directly to the brands and products they love. For the modern dream to thrive, companies need to focus on customer-centric strategies and invest in key technologies that help to build smarter, faster, and with greater personalization. Quality insights into target consumers are at the heart of all Marketing strategies in the digital era.
