Kerr profiles artists, scientists, writers, activists, and musicians who overcame childhood obstacles to become eminent women in her book Smart Girls Two: A New Psychology of Girls, Women and Giftedness. For example, writer and political activist Maya Angelou was 8 years old when she was raped by her mother's boyfriend. She has gone from being educated as a gifted girl to studying and nurturing the talents of today's gifted girls and creative adults. Talent development is her mission. I believe we all have a responsibility to use our gifts, to actualize them as much as possible, and to make a contribution to society," she says.
