Brodribb BOOK DESCRIPTION The excavation of the Roman villa at Shakenoak Farm, Oxfordshire, was carried out between 1960 and 1976 and the results were published in five volumes between 1968 and 1978. In his Preface, the surviving author A.R. Hands writes: "The three excavators, Conant Brodribb, David Walker and the writer, were equal participants in all aspects of the excavation and publication of the site. As the only survivor of the team, I have a special responsibility in decisions regarding the reprinting of the original reports as a single BAR volume, but after so many years of close friendship an Dropshort Roman Villa, Drayton, Oxfordshire Evaluation report and assessment of results. Dropshort Roman Villa. Drayton, Oxfordshire. The evaluation has served to confirm some of the details of the building complex located in the 1960s, and to ascertain more of its surrounding context, but the limited extent of the trenches excavated allow little more detailed discussion of the Site. Further analysis and detailed publication is not proposed, but a summary of the Site will be submitted to Oxoniensia, for the annual round-up of archaeology in the county. Books. The Domesday Book of 1086 records that after the Norman conquest of England the manor of Wilcote had become one of the many Oxfordshire estates held by William of Normandy's half-brother Odo, Bishop of Bayeux. [2] After Odo was deposed, Wilcote was granted to Manasser Arsic, Baron of Cogges.[2]. The present manor house was built in the late 16th or early 17th century and has some 18th-century alterations and 19th- and 20th-century additions.
