The artist made his first trip West in 1858, and traveled there again in subsequent decades. Reflecting his training at the famed Düsseldorf academy, Bierstadt's carefully composed romantic paintings are full of details that are faithful to nature but do not necessarily document a particular place. It is the title and not the specific landscape elements that locate this peaceful but impressive scene in the Valley of the Yosemite. Moran, perhaps more than any other painter of his time, was responsible for making Americans aware of their great natural heritage. The enthusiastic response to his pictures of the West, particularly of the Yellowstone and Grand Teton region, were influential in Congress's decision to establish the National Park System in 1872. I suppose I'm disappointed because I thought I was purchasing a book about Land Arts in the American West. This is just a description of the graduate program by the same name. But what a lovely description it is. Read more. One person found this helpful.
